Rawley isn't the type to crush hard and fast on anyone, but he's helpless when it comes to Reign, the new mail carrier. Even his bikes and his job as enforcer for a local motorcycle gang, the center of his world, don't compare to his interest in Reign. Unfortunately, Reign doesn't seem to be as interested—but secrets and magic have a way of turning everything upside down and Rawley discovers he not only loves one man, he loves four.

After her adventures in Australia Linda returns to England on hearing of her father's illness. Following his death she plans to ride through Africa and in 1974 begins this journey made at a time when few people venture into this continent, especially by motorcycle. Her 500cc BMW is already 17 years old and suffers many breakdowns during the trip. Sahara sand, Congo mud and an attack of malaria in Kenya all add to the thrill of this fifteen month journey and, despite the many setbacks, Linda still keeps a smile on her face. The events and people met are described with honesty and humour and the rich tapestry of the political history of Africa, at that time, is woven into the story.
